SEAHORSES...

It has a head like a horse and tail like a monkey, but the sea horse is really a fish. It has fins and uses its gills to breathe just like other fish. Water is taken in and passes through the gills which filter the oxygen from the water. The seahorse has armoured plates instead of scales, and unlike other fish it swims standing up.

The seahorse is a different type of fish. One of its features that make it so special is that the male is the one who gets pregnant. The male has a pouch where the female places her eggs. The male seahorse carries and looks after the eggs until they are ready to be born, which can take between thirty to fifty days. The seahorse can give birth to fifty baby seahorses. A baby seahorse is called a fry.
