Why did the civil war break out in 1642?

Charles I didn't just attack the House of Commons in 1642, although some people say that was the trigger. The real cause was a long struggle over who should rule the kingdom. Charles had a very strong belief in the divine right of kings, which meant he believed he was appointed by God to rule. This meant he didn't need the consent of Parliament to raise money or to make laws. Parliament, however, believed that the king's power was limited and that they should have a say in how the country was run.

In 1629, Charles dissolved Parliament and ruled without them for 11 years. This was called the Personal Rule. During this time, he raised taxes without Parliament's consent and tried to force people to worship in the way he wanted. This led to widespread anger and resistance.

In 1642, Charles called Parliament back but they refused to support him. He then ordered them to disperse and they fled to London. This led to the outbreak of the civil war. The war was fought between Charles's supporters, the Royalists, and those who supported Parliament, the Roundheads.

The war ended in 1651 with Charles's defeat at the Battle of Worcester. He was captured and executed in 1649. His son, Charles II, was restored to the throne in 1660, but the power of Parliament had been greatly increased and the king's power was limited.
