Discursive essay on Racism

Racism has existed for centuries, but during the last two hundred years hatred toward ethnic minorities or even majorities has flourished. Racism occurs all over the world, and happens in anyone and all ages and sexes. There are five main different forms of racism, open racism, covert racism and latent racism all express forms of hatred towards ethnic groups. These forms of racism, although different, all have the same main purpose, to promote hate towards ethnic groups.

Open racism expresses hatred of racial thought and speech. In America it is allowed due to the First Amendment that protects political views as racism. The American National Party and various of the parties under its protection, and as does the British National Party and the National Front. We do not have a First Amendment, but these obviously racist parties still exist. Open racism promotes their views through propaganda, but never may do so as it becomes socially unacceptable.

Covert racism promotes racism through violence and fear. This form of racism is not allowed because it promotes violence to express its ideas. Unfortunately, many ethnic racial groups claim they do not promote violence, and therefore they are allowed because not enough sufficient evidence exists to prove their hidden intent.

Latent racism expresses ideas of racism in hidden ways and sometimes, secret racism are not aware that they are racist. People nowadays do not express their dislike of minorities and are not prepared to show a feeling that could be called racist. Avoiding minorities on the street and to pay to an employee of a minority are examples of latent racism. The form of racism is the most common today.

However, back in the nineteenth century, latent and open racism were widespread. The Ku Klux Klan originated in the southern states of the US during the "Reconstruction" following the American Civil War. The original Klan was set up in Pulaski, Tennessee, on December 24, 1865, by six former
